4 THE COURT: Good afternoon.

5 We're here in the case of Emmanuel D. Kepas
6 against eBay, Inc. This is 06-CV-612.

7 Mr. Durham is here --

8 MR. DURHAM: I am, Your Honor.

9 THE COURT: Mr. Matthew Durham is here
10 representing the defendant eBay. Mr. D. Scott Crook is here 11 to my right representing the plaintiff.

12 Tell me who else you have at counsel table.

13 MR. CROOK: Yes, Your Honor. This is Kathryn 14 Steffey from my office who is an associate and for 15 Mr. Kepas, the plaintiff.

16 THE COURT: Thank you.

17 We're here on a motion to compel arbitration and 18 dismiss or stay proceedings.

19 Mr. Durham, it is your motion. I would be glad to 20 hear from you first.

21 MR. DURHAM: Thank you, Your Honor.

22 As the Court pointed out, we're here on eBay's
23 motion to compel arbitration. It is really quite a simple 24 matter today.

25 Just as a way of laying some factual background,

1 Mr. Kepas was hired by eBay in July of 2003 and after a 2 probationary period, he was hired as a regular employee. At 3 that time he signed an arbitration agreement and under the 4 arbitration agreement he agreed to arbitrate all claims 5 arising out of his employment with eBay.

6 In July of this year he filed a complaint in 7 Federal Court alleging sex discrimination and harassment and 8 age discrimination and breach of contract and breach of the 9 implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. When we 10 contacted Mr. Kepas's attorney to mention to him that there 11 was this arbitration agreement --

12 THE COURT: I know all this.

13 MR. DURHAM: Okay.

14 THE COURT: I have read your briefs, unless you 15 think you need it on the record.

16 MR. DURHAM: No.

17 THE COURT: This is just background, and we know 18 he wants to be here and you want to be in arbitration.

19 MR. DURHAM: Exactly.

20 The Court will also know that when Mr. Kepas 21 opposed our motion, he essentially raised two or three 22 issues. Basically he argued that the arbitration agreement 23 was unenforceable under California law and particularly 24 under the Armendariz case, because it imposed upon him at 25 least the risk of bearing certain costs attendant to the

1 arbitration that he wouldn't bear if he were in litigation.

2 Secondly, that the arbitration agreement was
3 unconscionable.

4 I think there is an additional issue regarding the 5 severability of some of the provisions of the arbitration 6 agreement that I will address in my argument, but I want to 7 address first of all Mr. Kepas's two objections to the 8 arbitration agreement.

9 First of all, he argues that he faces a risk of 10 bearing costs associated with the arbitration, costs that he 11 would not bear if he were litigating his action in court.

12 The agreement, which we have attached as an 13 exhibit to our moving papers, provides that the arbitrator
14 shall have the power to award any type of legal or equitable 15 relief that would be available in a court of competent 16 jurisdiction, including but not limited to costs of 17 arbitration and attorney's fees and punitive damages, when 18 such damages and fees are available under the applicable
19 statute and/or judicial authority.

20 I think this argument that Mr. Kepas risks bearing 21 the costs of arbitration because the arbitrator could 22 possibly award those to eBay is illusory, because the 23 arbitrator can't award those costs anymore than Your Honor 24 could impose upon Mr. Kepas costs associated with paying for 25 your time or renting this courtroom or anything like that.

1 Title Seven and the A.D.E.A. simply don't provide for an 2 award of those kinds of costs and, consequently, neither 3 does the arbitration agreement.

4 My reading of the arbitration agreement is that 5 this provision was actually intended to make it very clear 6 to an employee like Mr. Kepas, that anything that he was 7 entitled to under the applicable statutes and any remedies 8 that he could obtain in the courtroom he can obtain in 9 arbitration. But that does not allow the arbitrator the 10 ability to award costs that would not be awardable in 11 litigation under the appropriate statute. I think for that 12 reason that argument that he is subject to costs of the 13 arbitration and paying for the arbitrator and the time or 14 facilities is without merit and the agreement is not 15 enforceable on those grounds.

16 His second argument with respect to costs deals 17 with witness costs, particularly the costs associated with 18 the witnesses perhaps traveling to attend the arbitration 19 hearing. Mr. Kepas does not really cite any authority for 20 the proposition that requiring witnesses to testify in 21 another state makes the agreement unenforceable. I think 22 that that is because there is no authority for that 23 proposition. If Mr. Kepas had entered into an employment 24 contract that didn't have an arbitration clause, but did 25 have a forum selection clause, those costs would be the same

1 as they would be in an arbitration agreement forum selection
2 clause. I think what the Armendariz case was saying is if 3 you want to have an enforceable arbitration agreement, you 4 can't shift the costs that are unique to arbitration on to 5 the plaintiff. If you as the employer want to have 6 arbitration as your forum, then you, the employer, bear 7 those unique costs. But witness fees and getting the 8 witnesses to the forum that the parties have agreed upon as 9 the appropriate one for resolving disputes is not a cost 10 that is unique to arbitration. If we were litigating under 11 just a regular forum selection clause, Mr. Kepas would face
12 those same costs. I think on that basis the arbitration
13 agreement can't be found unenforceable.

14 Now I want to move on to the issue of 15 unconscionability, and as the Court certainly knows in order 16 to find the agreement unconscionable and, therefore,
17 unenforceable, it has to be both procedurally unconscionable
18 and substantively unconscionable. Mr. Kepas's arguments
19 with respect to procedural unconscionability are basically 20 that this was an adhesion contract and on a preprinted form 21 and not really subject to negotiation, and that he had been 22 working at eBay for four months at the time it was presented
23 to him and, therefore, he didn't really have a meaningful 24 choice with respect to the agreement.

25 We cited a number of cases, however, Your Honor,

1 that demonstrate that the fact that a contract is an 2 adhesion contract is certainly a relevant factor, but it
3 does not in and of itself make the agreement unenforceable.
4 You have to look for something beyond the mere fact that you
5 have an adhesion contract to find it unconscionable. You 6 have to have something like oppression or surprise or some 7 coercion or something like that. There is really no 8 evidence and no suggestion of anything like that in this 9 case. It is clearly very distinguishable from the Fitz case 10 where there was an employee who had worked with their 11 employer for 14 years and she would be required to forfeit
12 her employment or sign the agreement.

13 We have cited other cases where the mere fact that 14 an employee was sort of given this arbitration clause on a 15 take it or leave it basis, and certainly the Court found 16 that that was an adhesion contract but they did not find it
17 unconscionable or unenforceable on that basis. An important
18 factor here is I think you have to weigh kind of on a 19 sliding scale basis the procedural conscionability issues
20 against the substantive conscionability issues.

21 The arbitration agreement at issue in this case is 22 in my estimation a very straightforward, relatively short 23 and relatively clear agreement. I doubt that there was any 24 surprise. I doubt that Mr. Kepas didn't understand the 25 terms of the contract. I also think that it was not outside

1 the scope of what an employee entering into a new employment 2 relationship might expect to see. I don't think there has 3 really been a showing of any procedural unconscionability in 4 connection with this agreement.

5 With respect to substantive unconscionability
6 Mr. Kepas raises two subissues. One is that there is this 7 carve out provision that deals with claims arising from 8 eBay's proprietary information and invention agreement, and 9 the second is that there is this forum selection clause in 10 the arbitration agreement.

11 Addressing first the issue of the bilaterality or 12 the carve out provision, the Armendariz case basically says 13 that there only needs to be a modicum of bilaterality.
14 There does not have to be symmetrical mutuality in the 15 contract where each party has exactly symmetrical rights.
16 There has to be some sort of bilaterality to show that each 17 party is getting and were giving up something.

18 I think in this case the provision at issue is 19 clearly a bilateral provision. It provides that the parties 20 agree that any claims that either party has that arise out
21 of the employee proprietary information and inventions
22 agreement are excluded in the arbitration agreement. Then 23 it goes on to say that this includes things, for example, 24 like eBay wanting to enforce its rights with respect to the 25 disclosure or misappropriation of trade secrets, or an

1 employee can try and use another forum to enforce his or her
2 rights as an owner of an invention. There is clearly 3 mutuality here with respect to this provision.

4 Now, there has been some discussion about whether 5 a provision that carves out intellectual property rights or 6 carves out remedies with respect to injunctive or equitable 7 relief is really mutual or whether that mutuality is sort of 8 illusory. With this agreement I think you really have a 9 situation that is different from the cases cited, because 10 you don't have a limitation only to injunctive relief where 11 a lot of the cases have sort of said it is employers that 12 seek to enforce those clauses and not employees. Employees 13 are seeking remedies for wrongful termination or 14 discrimination and those kinds of things, and it is 15 employers that want the injunctive relief and all of that.

16 This agreement in its context is being used by an 17 employer in the technology industry where there are many 18 employees who are inventors and have inventions and want to 19 protect their own rights, and where it is not limited just 20 to injunctive relief but an employee who says, hey, do you 21 know what, you used my invention and I'm entitled to the 22 royalty or I am entitled to damages, and they can bring that 23 cause of action in court rather than in arbitration and I
24 think we meet the standard of mutuality there.

25 Moving on to the issue of the forum selection

1 clause, Mr. Kepas argues that the fact that the arbitration
2 agreement has a clause that requires the arbitration to 3 occur in California makes the agreement unconscionable. But 4 the standard really under California law, which is relevant 5 in this case, is that a forum selection clause is 6 enforceable unless it really deprives the plaintiff of his 7 or her day in court.

8           We have cited a number of cases that stand for the 9 proposition that a forum selection clause is not per se 10 unenforceable, that there is nothing unconscionable about 11 it, particularly in a situation where the employee would 12 understand entering into the employment relationship that 13 they are working for a big company with facilities in a lot
14 of different places, and the company might want, as a matter
15 of its own efficiency and convenience, to say if you have a 16 dispute with us, we're going to resolve it in one forum 17 instead of going all over the country to resolve these.

18           I think on either of the issues regarding costs,
19 whether it be the arbitration costs or witness travel costs,
20 or on the unconscionability issue, Mr. Kepas has not really 21 shown that this agreement is defective to the extent that it 22 would be unenforceable under the Armendariz case and 23 California law. We believe that the agreement is fully 24 enforceable and should be enforced in its entirety. That is 25 what the parties agreed to and that is what the parties

1 understood.

2           Should this Court conclude, however, that there is 3 a provision of the arbitration agreement that it believes is 4 unreasonable or shouldn't be enforced, the Court has ample 5 authority to sever that offending provision and enforce the 6 rest of the arbitration agreement.

7           The California civil code provides that you can do 8 that. There are multiple cases that we have cited in our 9 moving papers including the Bolter case where the Court
10 said, yes, this provision does not work and this provision 11 is unenforceable, but that doesn't mean that we throw out 12 the whole agreement. One case uses the phrase you don't 13 throw out the baby with the bath water. You can still 14 enforce the arbitration agreement as long as the defects in 15 the agreement don't go to the central purpose of providing 16 an alternate forum for the resolution of disputes between 17 the employer and the employee.

18           I think it is also important to point out, Your 19 Honor, that the agreement itself contains a severability
20 clause, and that the parties in entering into the contract 21 contemplated that, although they were doing their best to 22 enter into an enforceable contract, there might be some 23 problems here or there, and if that were the case, what they 24 wanted was to go ahead with the arbitration and strike 25 perhaps any offending provisions.

1           Now, the cases say that you can strike offending
2 provisions if they are collateral to the main purpose of the 3 agreement. We have cited a couple of cases that I think are 4 important. Once, again, we believe that the I.P. carve out
5 provision in the agreement and the forum selection clause 6 are fully enforceable, but there are certainly cases where 7 provisions like that were found unenforceable by a court 8 under other circumstances, and the court struck those 9 clauses while enforcing the arbitration agreement as a 10 whole.

11           Just in conclusion, I would summarize by pointing 12 out that Mr. Kepas really does not risk facing any costs in 13 this arbitration that he would not pay in a regular 14 litigation matter brought in court. He can't really be 15 charged with arbitration costs and witness costs, and it
16 would not be any different than if he were a plaintiff
17 litigating under a forum selection clause, that this 18 agreement is not unconscionable and that it is procedurally 19 fair, that Mr. Kepas was aware of what he was signing and 20 knew what the agreement said and that there was no 21 oppression or surprise. Also, the agreement is 22 substantively fair in that it is mutual and the forum 23 selection clause is not unreasonable or unconscionable on 24 these facts.

25           On that basis, Your Honor, I would submit it

1 unless you have questions.

2 THE COURT: No, I don't at this time. Thank you 3 very much.

4 Mr. Crook.

5 MR. CROOK: Thank you, Your Honor.

6 I think that there are essentially two very 7 significant facts that I think should persuade this Court 8 that the arbitration agreement is unenforceable as it
9 stands. The first and I think most important fact is one 10 that there is no general employment agreement in this case.
11 There is no written agreement that has been forwarded by 12 eBay that would govern other than this arbitration 13 agreement, and that the arbitration agreement itself was 14 drafted by eBay and was given to Mr. Kepas after a 15 probationary period. By the very language of that 16 agreement, it said I understand that I will not be hired by 17 the employer if I do not sign this agreement.

18 The reason those facts are significant is because 19 we are dealing with California law. eBay, who created this 20 agreement and required Mr. Kepas to sign it to continue
21 employment with eBay, put in it a provision that California
22 law would apply. The Armendariz case is the seminal case 23 that governs this issue.

24 There are two issues that this Court, two legal 25 issues that this Court must look at. Number one, does this

1 agreement itself violate public policy? That is what 2 Armendariz says is the first step in any analysis when we 3 are dealing with a public right. The second question is is 4 the contract itself unconscionable? Are there parts of the 5 contract that would be unconscionable under California law?
6 California law in the Armendariz case is very clear that the 7 court in California, the Supreme Court is very concerned 8 with the unequal bargaining power of employees, and the 9 position that they are in when they are given an adhesion 10 contract. So relying on Federal Court precedent, they 11 established the five public policy requirements. The fifth 12 one, of course, is the one that is at issue here with 13 respect to the public policy issue. That requirement simply 14 says that an arbitration agreement should not require 15 employees to pay either unreasonable costs or any 16 arbitrator's fees or expenses as a condition of access to 17 the arbitration forum.

18 Now, Armendariz's progeny says that that means not 19 only is the access issue an important issue, but whether 20 there is any risk that an employee may have to pick up those 21 costs. What is significant in this case is that eBay now 22 says, well, there is a provision that we understand and we 23 would like this Court to interpret to say we didn't really 24 mean what we put in the agreement. The provision states 25 this, that the arbitrator shall have the power to award any

1 type of legal or equitable relief that would be available in 2 a court of competent jurisdiction including but not limited
3 to the costs of arbitration, attorney's fees and punitive 4 damages when such damages and fees are available under the 5 applicable statute and/or judicial authority.

6 So taking eBay's argument at face value, they are 7 asking this Court to ignore the provision that says costs of 8 arbitration. They are saying, well, it is in there but we 9 could never ever authorize that and no court would ever give 10 us that, so just ignore it. As the Court is well aware,
11 that is a violation of contractual interpretation. You 12 can't just ignore what was put in there.

13 THE COURT: How is it different from costs of 14 court?

15 MR. CROOK: Because under the arbitration
16 agreement it specifically says that wherever the agreement
17 is silent, the A.A.A. rules apply. Rule 48 of the American 18 Arbitration rules says and defines costs of arbitration to 19 include the expenses of the arbitrator, the arbitrator's 20 fees, and it also includes expenses and hearing room fees.
21 So what we have is we look at the arbitration agreement and 22 it uses the term the costs of arbitration, not the costs of 23 court, it says the costs of arbitration, and that is defined 24 under the rules to include those arbitrator's fees.

25 THE COURT: They say they are not going to

1 interpret it that way.

2 MR. CROOK: Yes. They say that they are not going
3 to interpret it that way now, but the question is why is it
4 inserted in the first place? If it has no meaning, why did 5 they put it in?

6 Then, secondly, I would suggest the reason they 7 put it in is to discourage employees from going to the forum
8 so that they may have to incur those fees. If they are 9 saying we would have never gone after those fees, why do 10 they put it in there? The only reason that we can see is to 11 discourage employees from going to the forum. That is why 12 we have that problem with that provision.

13 There is a real risk under Rule 45 of the A.A.A.
14 as well that an employee -- it says specifically in those 15 rules that an arbitrator may charge to an employee the costs
16 of the arbitrator, the arbitrator's fees and the hearing
17 room fees. So there seems to be no other reason to put it 18 in other than to do exactly what they say, and that is to 19 recover those costs and to move those back over to the 20 employees. If that wasn't the reason, then the other reason 21 was intimidation and that, of course, flies in the face of 22 the policy behind Armendariz.

23 The second problem is the witness fee issue. The 24 witness fee issue, again, is that what they have asked to do
25 is to have the forum be Santa Clara County. What that does

1 is it makes Mr. Kepas have to pay for witnesses to go to 2 Santa Clara County where eBay's headquarters are, where they 3 have access to everything, and Mr. Kepas is going to have to 4 go there.

5 Now, their argument has been, well, if this were a 6 regular forum selection clause in a regular general 7 employment agreement, then it would be okay. Well, that is 8 not exactly true because under the case law, you have to 9 show fairness for a forum selection clause. The most 10 significant problem with that argument is this. There is no
11 general employment agreement that does have a forum
12 selection clause, so but for the arbitration agreement there 13 is no reason to go to Santa Clara County.

14 In fact, the site of the allegations was in Utah 15 and the proper forum would be here. So under Armendariz the 16 question is what type of fees would you have had to incur
17 had you not had that arbitration agreement? Well, in this 18 case the only place where that would have been proper would 19 have been in Utah. There is no forum selection clause that 20 would require them to go to Santa Clara County.

21 What is also very significant, Your Honor, is that 22 in the arbitration agreement, there is the carve out
23 exception which applies to the proprietary and invention 24 agreement. What is significant about that is that there is 25 no forum selection clause with respect to that carve out.

1 In other words, if eBay were so concerned about having Santa 2 Clara County be their site where they have their 3 arbitrations or their matters litigated, presumably they 4 would have included within their carve out an additional 5 forum selection clause.

6 Now these both speak to the public policy
7 argument, in other words, under Armendariz improperly 8 shifting the costs that Mr. Kepas would not otherwise be 9 required to pay to Mr. Kepas.

10 The second issue, though, is unconscionability.
11 Under California law you have to show two things under 12 unconscionability. One is procedural unconscionability and,
13 two, substantive unconscionability. Procedural 14 unconscionability is sufficient if there is a contract of 15 adhesion. In Armendariz, the case that is relevant here, 16 the parties, before they were ever employed, signed an 17 arbitration agreement. That was it. The court found that 18 it was procedurally unconscionable because of the uneven
19 bargaining position. The element of procedural 20 unconscionability is easily met in this case.

21 What adds more to the procedural unconscionability 22 is that Mr. Kepas worked for a period of four months where 23 he exclusively worked for eBay and was fully intending to 24 work there after the probationary period, and then he was 25 given the arbitration agreement, only after he had given up

1 other opportunities to work, and at that point the 2 procedural unconscionability -- the scale weighs heavily in 3 favor of Mr. Kepas's favor. The Fitz case which we have 4 cited in our papers clearly indicates that that type of 5 dealing is unconscionable.

6 But, of course, even if there is procedural 7 unconscionability the Court also has to find substantive 8 unconscionability. That is, again, easily met in this case.
9 That is because there are three issues. One is the cost 10 shifting which we have already talked about. Secondly, the 11 forum selection clause -- there are two cases in California 12 directly on point which say -- and they are Bolter and 13 Wilmot, and both of those cases say that if an arbitration 14 agreement requires a party to raise a claim in a forum that 15 they are far removed from, and that they are the weaker
16 party in the negotiations, then that is substantively
17 unconscionable. There is no other case that has been cited
18 by eBay that says that it is not substantively
19 unconscionable.

20 Again, they go back to the general forum selection 21 arguments and argue that, well, because generally you could 22 have it, it is okay. But in these two California cases, 23 both Bolter and Wilmot, they are arbitration forum selection
24 clause cases and they are directly on point.

25 Finally, eBay requires Mr. Kepas to litigate his

1 most likely claim and exempts eBay's most likely claims.
2 That is simply because of the carve out. Any claim that is 3 subject to the arbitration agreement or that Mr. Kepas could 4 bring or would most likely bring is required to be 5 arbitrated. Any claim that is most likely to be brought by 6 eBay does not have to be arbitrated.

7 The case that is directly on point, which is Fitz, 8 which has the exact same mutuality arguments that eBay has 9 been making here, says that that is substantively
10 unconscionable. Therefore, we meet at least three different 11 substantive unconscionability elements under California law, 12 under controlling California law.

13 What is important is that California is very 14 concerned about the tenor of the agreement. Armendariz says 15 that if the central purpose of the contract is tainted with 16 illegality, then the contract as a whole cannot be enforced.
17 The only purpose for this agreement was to force Mr. Kepas 18 into a forum where it would cost him more money and it would 19 be beneficial to eBay. Armendariz is very concerned about 20 those two elements, the cost and the repeat player problem 21 that comes into account when you're dealing with 22 arbitration. Because eBay will be doing these in Santa 23 Clara County, and because they will be doing them 24 repeatedly, they will get the benefit of the doubt and that 25 is what Armendariz is worried about. Under those cases, the

1 only two published cases that deal with multiple defects,
2 they say that this Court must throw out the arbitration
3 agreement.

4 Now, eBay does cite several unpublished cases, but 5 under the California rule that is applicable, 977, it says
6 that they must not be cited or relied on by a court or a 7 party in any other action. We would say that it is improper 8 for this Court to even consider those cases. But even if 9 this Court were to consider them, I would just note that 10 both Wilkins and Kozonasky deal only with one provision 11 being unconscionable, not multiple defects.

12 We would argue that this Court must throw out the 13 arbitration agreement and allow Mr. Kepas to continue in his 14 action here and to deny the motion to compel arbitration.

15 If Your Honor has no other questions --

16 THE COURT: No, I don't right now.

17 Thank you, Mr. Crook.

18 Mr. Durham, did you want to say anything in 19 response?

20 MR. DURHAM: If I may, Your Honor, just for a 21 moment.

22 THE COURT: Do you contend that the cost of 23 arbitration is synonymous with the cost of court?

24 MR. DURHAM: I don't know that I would contend
25 that it is synonymous with the costs of court, but what I

1 would contend is that if it was not a cost that a court
2 could award, it is not a cost that the arbitrator could 3 award. That is what the agreement says.

4 THE COURT: So not completely synonymous but 5 referring to the same thing, the same kind of thing?

6 MR. DURHAM: The same kind of thing, but if it is 7 not an arbitration cost that is parallel to a cost that 8 would be awarded by a judge, then it is not a cost to be 9 awarded by the arbitrator.

10 First of all, we would basically --

11 THE COURT: How do these arbitrators get picked?

12 MR. DURHAM: I think --

13 THE COURT: Is there one or two or --

14 MR. DURHAM: I think it would proceed under the 15 rules of the Triple A.

16 THE COURT: What does that say?

17 MR. DURHAM: That the parties have their choice.
18 I have not checked that rule recently, but, as I recall, the 19 parties can choose one or two or three.

20 With respect to the issue of costs, I think Your 21 Honor's question points out exactly the issue, and that is 22 that we think the agreement basically says that the 23 arbitrator can only award what a judge could award. If a 24 judge couldn't award costs like courtroom fees or the 25 compensation for the judge's time, the arbitrator can't

1 award that to the plaintiff either.

2 THE COURT: The strict reading of your language,
3 your client's language would come out the other way.

4 MR. DURHAM: Well, I think that the language --

5 THE COURT: It includes the arbitrator's costs.

6 MR. DURHAM: I think the language is broad because 7 in some situations the arbitrator is going to be making an 8 award that the employer will pay and that could include the 9 arbitrator's costs, and I guess in some situations the 10 arbitrator might be making an award that the employee would 11 pay. We don't think that would include the arbitrator's 12 costs, but the clause is broad enough to encompass both 13 situations.

14 THE COURT: Well, but it is also broad enough so 15 that later if you were to assess the arbitrator's costs 16 against Mr. Kepas, and you included in that the fee that the 17 arbitrator charged, there is an allowance under the present
18 way this thing is structured for that argument to prevail.

19 MR. DURHAM: Well, I don't think so, Your Honor, 20 because what it says is he can award any type of legal or 21 equitable relief that would be available in a court of 22 competent jurisdiction. A court of competent jurisdiction
23 can't award that kind of relief to an employer. It can't 24 require an employee to pay for the judge's time. It says 25 that it would include those kinds of damages or fees when

1 they were available under the applicable statute and/or 2 judicial authority. Once again, I don't think that they 3 are.

4 With respect to the issue of an adhesion contract 5 and --

6 THE COURT: Well, I don't know the word, but it is 7 a little untight, untidy.

8 MR. DURHAM: I am not sure that that is the best
9 language that anyone could ever come up with, but I do think 10 that what it contemplates is that the arbitrator might be 11 making an award that goes one way or that goes the other 12 way, and what this language I believe is intended to say is 13 you as the employee under California law and under 14 Armendariz can get everything in arbitration that you could 15 get in a court of law.

16 THE COURT: Well, that is what you want to say,
17 but that is not necessarily what it says.

18 MR. DURHAM: Well, but the limiting language that 19 says that the arbitrator can only award what a court of 20 competent jurisdiction would award I think places a 21 limitation on that.

22 THE COURT: Well, that is maybe why I think it is 23 not so tight. It says the arbitrator shall have the power 24 to award any type of legal or equitable relief that would be 25 available in a court of competent jurisdiction. So far we

1 are fine. Including the costs of arbitration. Then that is 2 defined, as Mr. Crook pointed out, to include the 3 arbitrator's fees.

4 MR. DURHAM: The arbitrator certainly could award
5 that to the plaintiff.

6 THE COURT: But he could make an award against the 7 plaintiff, at the end of which the plaintiff is stuck with 8 the arbitrator's fees. That is what they are worried about.

9 MR. DURHAM: I understand that that is what they 10 are worried about, but I think, taking the provision as a 11 whole, that can't happen.

12 THE COURT: Why can't it?

13 MR. DURHAM: It can't because --

14 THE COURT: It says including the costs of the 15 arbitration.

16 MR. DURHAM: Right.

17 THE COURT: Maybe that is why it was not very 18 tightly written because you say that is inconsistent. Only 19 the costs that are similar to the costs that a court would 20 have incurred --

21 MR. DURHAM: That is what I think a court could 22 award, and I think that is what the arbitrator can award.

23 THE COURT: Well, maybe that is why I think it is 24 not very tightly written.

25 MR. DURHAM: I don't want to move away from this

1 subject unless you are ready to, Your Honor.

2 Do you have other questions?

3 THE COURT: Let me just look at something.

4 MR. DURHAM: Okay.

5 THE COURT: For example, here in this very court,
6 occasionally we refer a matter to arbitration. In fact,
7 there are times I have ordered parties to go to arbitration.
8 Usually they agree on how they are going to share those 9 costs, but if they don't, I am not so sure that I don't have 10 the authority to order those costs to be allocated among the 11 parties in some way that I think is equitable.

12 Under the special master provision of Rule 53, the 13 Court has the authority to fix the compensation of the 14 special master who in effect is serving as a type of an 15 arbitrator. So when it says available in a court of 16 competent jurisdiction and you say including the costs of 17 arbitration, we do things similar enough to that that --

18 MR. DURHAM: Well, I guess if you were looking 19 down the road and saying that in the underlying arbitration 20 proceeding there was a need to bring in someone else to 21 decide a particular issue, and that those costs be allocated
22 in a certain way, I don't know, but I think that is an issue
23 that probably wasn't contemplated by the parties. I think 24 what this language was contemplating is that in the ordinary 25 course what could the plaintiff expect to be awarded? I

1 think what this provision is saying is that if you could get 2 it in --

3 THE COURT: Well, that is what you thought it was 4 supposed to say, but when you write it and put the costs of 5 arbitration, and that is actually defined under these 6 arbitration rules that you're referring everything to as 7 including the arbitrator's fees, it just makes it less than 8 tight. It should have said the costs of arbitration, and 9 then that is defined, and by saying the costs of arbitration 10 we don't mean the same meaning as that phrase is defined in 11 the arbitration rules that we are adopting, no. It means in 12 this sense only those costs of arbitration that are the same 13 as the kinds of costs courts award when they are awarding 14 costs in a court of law.

15 Right?

16 MR. DURHAM: Well, I guess --

17 THE COURT: Well --

18 MR. DURHAM: If you and I were writing it --

19 THE COURT: Stranger things have happened.

20 Mr. Crook is making a very good argument that the costs of 21 arbitration is a term of art under the arbitration rules,
22 and you have said on the one hand that they would be limited 23 to what a court of competent jurisdiction could award, but 24 then in the very next clause it says including costs of 25 arbitration. It is a little squishy.

1           Is squishy a word? That is an untight word.

2           MR. DURHAM: I think that is a word.

3           I think the reason that may be the case because it 4 is contemplating awards going either direction. Maybe they 5 would award arbitration costs to the plaintiff, but under 6 their limiting language they wouldn't award those to the 7 employer.

8           THE COURT: Well, it seems that the California 9 courts would not want arbitration provisions to be upheld if 10 there was the possibility that the expenses that are 11 associated with hiring an arbitrator and hiring an 12 arbitrator's room and all of those kinds of costs would ever 13 be required to be paid by the employee.

14           MR. DURHAM: Well, that is why like, for example, 15 in the Mercurio case they found a problem because that 16 provision said that all arbitration costs would be awarded 17 to the prevailing party, which is not what this agreement
18 says. What this agreement says is that the arbitrator can 19 award what a court of competent jurisdiction could award.
20 It is different. The language is different --

21           THE COURT: -- than in that case.

22           MR. DURHAM: I think it was done to address the 23 concerns that are raised in Armendariz.

24           THE COURT: Just kind of sloppily.

25           MR. DURHAM: Well, I didn't write it and I can

1 understand the Court's concern, but I think the language
2 says that if the Court could award it to you, the arbitrator
3 can award it to you.

4 In another place in the agreement eBay agrees to 5 pay the arbitrator's costs, so I don't see the risk that 6 Mr. Kepas would receive those because eBay would bear those 7 costs.

8 THE COURT: Okay.

9 MR. DURHAM: With respect to the witness fees, I 10 think our argument is basically that what Armendariz says is 11 that if there are costs that are -- I don't think the 12 language in Armendariz is unique to arbitration but it is 13 similar language. In other words, if there are costs that 14 the employee would face because you're in arbitration rather 15 than litigation, those costs should be borne by the 16 employer, but witness fees and expenses of getting witnesses
17 to the forum where it is being decided, there is nothing
18 unique about that with respect to arbitration. Any time 19 that you're litigating an action in a forum where the 20 witness does not live, there is that issue. I don't think 21 that is the kind of cost that Armendariz is talking about 22 when it talks about arbitration costs. Consequently, I 23 don't think that that suggests that the agreement is 24 unenforceable under that case.

25 Mr. Crook raised the issue or the fact that there

1 was no forum selection clause in connection with the carve
2 out regarding trade secrets and inventions. I think there
3 is a good explanation for that. I think if you need to go
4 get an injunction, that you need to go get the injunction
5 where the offending party is. That is a situation where a 6 forum selection clause probably does not make sense, because 7 you have got to be able to go get an injunction where the 8 problem is. That would be true for the employee. If the 9 employee found out that eBay was using his or her invention
10 in a particular forum, he would want to go get an injunction 11 in that forum to stop eBay from doing that. So I think that 12 is the situation there.

13 With respect to unconscionability, we have cited a 14 number of cases that suggest that the mere fact that someone 15 is given a contract, a preprinted contract on a form, terms 16 that are not changed, and you're sort of told that this is 17 the agreement and you take it or you leave it, that 18 certainly suggests that the contract is an adhesion 19 contract, but that does not mean that the contract is 20 unconscionable or unenforceable. In the cases cited by the 21 parties here, where the courts have found procedural 22 unconscionability is where the terms have been hidden in the 23 contract, where you had to refer to the bylaws of the 24 N.A.S.D. in order to know what the terms of the arbitration
25 agreement were, or where the language was buried in small

1 print in footnotes or something like that or appended to the 2 back of the employment application.

3 That is not the situation here. This was a 4 stand-alone agreement. It is two pages and it is very 5 straightforward. There is no suggestion, other than the 6 mere fact that it is an adhesion contract, that there was 7 anything oppressive or unfair or hidden about the terms of 8 this contract.

9 With respect to the carve out provision, Mr. Crook 10 argues that their cases basically say that the types of 11 cases that an employer is going to litigate are these I.P.
12 claims, and the types of cases that an employee is going to 13 litigate are the kind that tend to follow the arbitration 14 clause. I think what you have to do is look at it in the 15 context of this industry and this particular provision. In 16 none of the cases cited is there a provision that is like 17 this provision. This provision clearly goes out of its way 18 to make it clear to the employee that if you have 19 intellectual property rights that you want protected, that 20 you can litigate those in court as well. The provision is 21 on its face very mutual, and given the fact that eBay is a 22 technology company where it has employees who are patent 23 owners and inventors, there is certainly a mutuality with 24 respect to that provision and that does not make it 25 substantively unconscionable.

1           With respect to the issue of the forum selection
2 clause, I think the issue there -- I don't know that it 3 really -- there is certainly no authority for the 4 proposition that because there is a forum selection clause
5 in a stand-alone arbitration agreement that that is somehow 6 more unconscionable than a forum selection clause in an 7 employment agreement. I just don't understand why that 8 makes the forum selection clause more offensive than it 9 would be in any kind of contract. On that basis I would 10 just suggest that the forum selection clause does not 11 suggest any sort of unconscionability.

12           Finally, with respect to this issue of multiple 13 defects, there are in fact a number of cases that we cited 14 in our papers that deal with arbitration agreements where 15 there was a severance of offending provisions made even 16 though there was more than one defect. I believe that those 17 are unreported, but the fact of the matter is what you would 18 have to sort of suggest here is that Armendariz is making 19 some sort of a mathematical argument that if there is one 20 offending provision that you can sever that out and enforce 21 the rest of the agreement, but if there are two you can't.

22           I think the issue here is you have to look at what 23 the core purpose of the arbitration agreement was and is, 24 which is to provide an alternate forum for the resolution of 25 these disputes. If you find a provision that is

1       troublesome, and that provision can be severed without 2       altering that core purpose, then California law and the 3       agreement itself and the Armendariz case and its progeny all 4       suggest that that can be done by the Court.

5               THE COURT: Thank you very much, Mr. Durham.

6               Did you want to say anything more in response to 7       him?

8               MR. CROOK: Your Honor, just one thing.

9               THE COURT: Okay.

10              MR. CROOK: It will be brief.

11              THE COURT: Sure.

12              MR. CROOK: With respect to the issue of taking 13       the agreement as a whole, that is what we are speaking about 14       with respect to Armendariz. What you do is if there are 15       multiple defects, you look at them and say why are they 16       there? What is the purpose of them being there? In this 17       case the significant defects are, number one, a forum
18       selection clause that requires Mr. Kepas to go elsewhere.
19       There is no general employment agreement that has a forum
20       selection clause, but we have an arbitration agreement.
21       What is the purpose in doing that? That advantages eBay and 22       disadvantages Mr. Kepas significantly.

23              Number two, arbitration costs can be shifted to 24       Mr. Kepas under the way that that clause is currently 25       constructed. You have gone through the language and can see

1 the problem with it, but the other issue is a court of 2 competent jurisdiction would not be awarding arbitration
3 costs unless in the circumstance that you're talking about, 4 a master situation, and so the inclusion of that suggests to 5 the employee that you may have to take these significant 6 costs on yourself, again, discouraging an employee from 7 litigating.

8           The third thing is the carve out. I just wanted 9 to note a couple of things about that. Number one, on the 10 carve out, and with respect to the issue of the carve out, 11 eBay has the burden of proving that there is a special need 12 in the industry or in their particular circumstance to have 13 the carve out. That comes out of Armendariz and Fitz both.
14 In this case all we have are generalized arguments about 15 eBay being a different type of company.

16           The second thing is you'll note that that 17 agreement, which was allegedly entered into between Mr.
18 Kepas and eBay, was not included with the signing papers.
19 If in fact it is as liberal as he is suggesting that it is, 20 that would be interesting, because, for the most part, those 21 types of agreements give work product to eBay, not the 22 employee. So who is most likely to enforce that agreement?
23 The fact is we can't even discuss that because we don't have 24 a copy of that agreement. It wasn't given to the Court. So 25 those types of arguments I don't think add anything.

1 I think, taken as a whole, what is the arbitration
2 agreement intended to do? It was intended to make it hard
3 for Mr. Kepas to bring a claim, and under California law
4 those types of contracts should not be enforced.

5 THE COURT: Thank you very much, Mr. Crook.

6 The motion is granted. The matter is referred to 7 arbitration pursuant to the agreement. I find the agreement
8 to be binding on the parties. It is a contract of adhesion, 9 but that does not make it illegal. Many employment based 10 requirements are contracts of adhesion going one way or the 11 other.

12 I do require for this agreement, consistent with 13 my reading of California law, and I'm not going to issue a 14 written opinion, so I want to say a couple of things on the 15 record, but especially the Armendariz case which is cited by 16 both sides, and I think it is very clear, and I find that 17 the requirements of Armendariz are satisfied here, including 18 the requirement that the agreement does not require
19 employees to pay either unreasonable costs or any 20 arbitrator's fees or expenses as a condition of access to 21 the arbitration forum.

22 I'm granting the motion but I'm making it clear
23 that the Court has interpreted and accepted the defendant's 24 interpretation of the reference to arbitration costs as 25 those costs that are limited to the same types of costs that

1 could be granted by this Court under the Rules of Civil 2 Procedure and the local rules of the Court, and may not 3 include the expenses related to the arbitrator's fees and 4 the other costs of arbitration such as rental of the 5 physical facility and the like. That is one adjustment.
6 The defendant claims it is no different than what is 7 intended to be in any event.

8 That should be clear in the order that you are 9 going to prepare, Mr. Durham.

10 I am also going to require that in order for the 11 arbitration agreement to be valid, that the forum selection
12 clause be adjusted to allow the arbitration to occur in Utah
13 or California at the plaintiff's election. My best reading, 14 and this is not Armendariz, but I'm looking primarily at the 15 Wilmot and Bolter cases, the two cases cited by the 16 plaintiff from the California Court of Appeals, which 17 indicate to me that this provision is improper under these 18 circumstances, and that the plaintiff at least ought to have 19 the option of requiring the arbitration proceeding, to which 20 he is bound, to occur in Utah and not to be required to go
21 to California and take all of his witnesses there and pay 22 for their fees, the witness fees in doing so.

23 I am not persuaded, and you have done an excellent
24 job of arguing this, Mr. Crook, and presenting the position 25 in your brief as well, as well as I think you could possibly

1 do, but I'm not persuaded that the provisions relating to 2 intellectual property are sufficiently problematic to 3 require the Court to invalidate the entire agreement, under 4 the general description of the business eBay is in, and the 5 explanation given by Mr. Durham both in his brief and here
6 today, so I am not inclined to require severance of that 7 clause, nor to preserve the underlying arbitration
8 agreement.

9 Prepare an order to that effect, Mr. Durham.

10 MR. DURHAM: Yes.

11 THE COURT: Thank you both for your arguments and 12 your briefing. They have been very helpful.

13 We'll be in recess.

14 Make sure that he sees it and approves it as to 15 form.
